

Some have called him an “R&B version of George Jones,” while others have called him a “Country Otis Redding.” Whichever description you feel fits him best, there is no doubting the fact that when you hear the music of T. Graham Brown, you are hearing something that is very special. Music is all the singer has ever known, and it shows in such radio staples as “I Tell It Like It Used To Be,” “Don’t Go To Strangers,” and “Darlene.”

T. was born in Atlanta, Georgia. By the end of the 1970’s, the singer would be the featured singer for such bands as T. Graham Brown & Reo Diamond and T. Graham Brown & the Mighty Rack of Spam – named because of his longtime affinity for the Hormel food product. He married his wife Sheila in 1980, and with her love and support, the singer soon found his way to Music City.

As is the case with many performers, Brown first found work performing advertising jingles for companies such as Hardee’s, Almond Joy, and Mountain Dew. His soulful talents soon found their way to EMI Music Publishing, where he was signed as a songwriter. It wouldn’t be long before Country Music Hall of Fame executive Jim Fogelson (who signed George Strait and Garth Brooks to their contracts) would take notice of Brown, inking him to a recording deal with Capitol for many years.

Never one to limit his musical tastes to one certain style, T. Graham Brown has carved out a career that has included success in Country, Soul, and Gospel. As great as his laurels might be, the singer has no plans to rest on them – always looking ahead to the next musical milestone or goal – though he might give thirty minutes here and there for a nostalgic trip to Mayberry, as one of his biggest passions is The Andy Griffith Show, of which he can proudly quote script after script. Needless to say, T. Graham Brown has come a long way from R.F.D. 30529 in Georgia, and that trek will no doubt continue!

PERSONAL HIGHLIGHTS

Multiple #1 hits on the Billboard Hot Country Songs chart including “Hell and High Water,” “Don’t Go to Strangers,” and “Darlene”
Hit #1 on the Gospel charts with “Working on a Building” and He’ll Take Care of You

Charted ten Top 10 Country singles

Charted 14 Top 40 Country songs

Recorded on tracks with artists including George Jones, Tanya Tucker, Trace Adkins, Vince Gill, Neal McCoy, Jason Crabb and more

Released 14 albums from 1985 to 2015

Received first Grammy nomination for 2015 album Forever Changed

Sang advertising jingles for companies such as Taco Bell, McDonald’s, Disneyland, Budweiser, Coca-Cola and more

Regularly featured on television shows Country’s Family Reunion and Larry’s Country Diner

DEBUT ALBUM:
I Tell It Like It Used to Be (1986)

LATEST ALBUM:
Forever Changed

PERSONAL

Hometown: Arabi, GA
 Birthday: October 30

tgrahambrown.com

Webster Public Relations, 615-777-6995, www.websterpr.com
 Kirt Webster – kirt@websterpr.com • Jeremy Westby – jeremy@websterpr.com
 Kyle Watson – kyle@websterpr.com